The Clever Rabbit & The Greedy Lion

In the dense forests of ancient India, a fierce lion named Bhasuraka terrorized all the animals.

To avoid being hunted mercilessly, the forest council agreed to send one animal each day.

When it was the tiny rabbit's turn, he walked as slowly as possible, thinking of a clever plan.

The lion roared with hunger: 'Why are you so late, you puny creature?!'

The rabbit bowed: 'Your Majesty, another enormous lion in an underground fortress stopped me and claimed HE is the real king of the jungle!'

Furious, Bhasuraka demanded: 'Take me to him!'

The rabbit led him to a deep water well. 'He is hiding down there, Sire.'

The lion peered in, saw his own roaring reflection in the clear water, and leaped in with fury, freeing the entire forest forever.

MORAL OF THE STORY:

"Wisdom and patience are far stronger than brute physical force."

The Four Friends: Deer, Turtle, Crow & Mouse

Near a beautiful lotus pond lived four inseparable friends: a swift deer, a wise turtle, an observant crow, and a tiny mouse named Hiranyaka.

One morning, the deer stepped into a hunter's sturdy hemp net.

The crow flew up to scout the hunter's arrival. The mouse scurried over with sharp teeth and gnawed through the net knots.

When the hunter arrived, the deer bounded away, the crow took to the sky, and the mouse darted into a burr.

By cooperating with their individual talents, the four friends proved that unity is the ultimate shield against danger.

MORAL OF THE STORY:

"United together in loyal friendship, even the small can overcome great peril."
